Value Vet expands presence in Hermitage

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Value Vet, a leading veterinary clinic of Nashville, has recently expanded to service the Donelson and Hermitage communities. This is the third vet clinic opened by Dr. Robert Watts, DVM.

Located at 3423 Lebanon Pike, the former Valvoline Oil Change location has been completely transformed into a modern and high-tech clinic. A giant metal dog sculpture marks the spot on Lebanon Pike and colorful ovals adorn the awning of the building. Seemingly random windows on the front of the building create visual interest and allow plenty of natural light into the interior. There are plenty of neat designs to look at inside as well; you will find two 12 foot tall dog houses that serve as exam rooms, a circular metal truss system suspends a TV, and a contemporary wall design highlights the entranceway.

“We are pleased to celebrate the opening of our third vet clinic,” said Lori Sires, manager. “Our commitment will always be to the well-being of our customer's pets through excellent service, low prices, and a pleasant office visit. We are meeting so many great Hermitage pet owners.”

Dr. Watts likes to differentiate his clinics from other veterinarian practices through paperless check-in, state-of-the-art equipment, and modern interior designs. “Besides having a great staff, part of the success of my clinics can be attributed to how we stand apart from your typical vet visit. I think our customers have taken notice,” said Dr. Watts. “We hope to continue opening new clinics in Middle Tennessee.”

Value Vet specializes in affordable veterinary care for small animals, including a complete range of convenient and typical veterinary services and surgeries. The company has been voted "Best Veterinarian" by the readers of the Nashville Scene and the Freedom Press for 2005 and 2006. In summer 2008, NashvillePAW magazine voted Value Vet "Best Clinic" and "Best Veterinarian". Visit www.valuevet.net for more information.
